1. The meeting took place at my house, in person, at roughly 11am on January 22nd.
2. During this meeting, we went over pretty much everything that was on the assignment in terms of questions about the site. I provided my client with rough ideas for the site, noted her feedback, and used it to create the final wireframes. She provided me with the images she wanted used on the site, as well as her own logo that she wanted to use. She liked that I was using the AGILE approach as it gives her more say in case she changes her mind on stuff (which, according to her, she probably will!). She isn't in a rush for a new website since she isn't currently seeing clients, so she is happy with the timeline at the moment.
3. In terms of changes, I was initially thinking of having images that slide (like in Netflix and many other applications) to show off hair services, products, and work that my client has done. However, she specifically requested that everything be non-flashy and very easy to use, which meant that she didn't want this. In addition, she wanted a more modern/sleek look for the site, which is something that I wasn't planning on. When creating the wireframes and sitemap, I made sure to account for it being easy to use, intuitive, and not flashy.
